BACKGROUND

These interlocal agreements will provide for an Upskilling Dallas Program. The City of Dallas Small Business Center has sought proposals from eligible entities through an open application process to deliver certified skills training, workforce training, and/or education for employment opportunities for eligible participants, with such training or opportunities leading to a living wage. Workforce training is focused on the current target labor market needs in Dallas including, targeted industries, such as advanced technical and advance learning programs, solar technician, advanced telecommunications, and advanced IT, FinTech advanced, manufacturing, biotechnology, electrical vehicle technician, alternative teacher certification, business services, or other industries with strong employment growth projections that result in a living-wage job ($15.21 per hour) for working-aged adults.

Eligible participants include City residents who have been financially impacted by the COVID-19 pandemic and who are members of a qualifying low- or moderate-income household. A low-income household means a household with income at or below 65 percent of the Federal Poverty Guidelines for the size of its household based on the poverty guidelines published most recently by the Department of Health and Human Services. A moderate-income household means a household with income at or below 80 percent of the Federal Poverty Guidelines for the size of its household based on poverty guidelines published most recently by the Department of Health and Human Services. Additional households may qualify for eligibility based on a demonstrated financial need, such as due to unemployment, an increase in food or housing insecurity, and/ or a household that qualifies for Children's Health Insurance Program, Childcare Subsidies through the Child Care development fund (CCDF) Program or Medicaid.

The workforce training program has been designed to address the declining workforce by making strategic recovery efforts and provide upskilling to unemployed workers, and under-skilled individuals. This City-led workforce training program will include data tracking analysis to address the rapid changes in labor market trends and gaps within the city of Dallas economy to ensure participants receive training and skills needed. ARPA funding in the amount of $500,000 will be used to accomplish these priorities. These trainings are designed for City residents that have been financially impacted by COVID-19 and who are members of low- and moderate-income households.
